

October 28 2011

Just a Thought -- Zombie Fiction

Everywhere you look these days, zombies are rearing their decaying heads. From films like "Zombieland" to novels like Pride and Prejudice and Zombies to the website of the Centers for Disease Control, it seems that the zombie is our new favorite monster. But the ranks of the mindlessly hungry undead have not only invaded classic literature, they have also been joined by new brethren who think between nibbling on brains and are able to tell their own stories in their own words. The zombie fiction genre is expanding as new authors sink their teeth into the subject. For a few new and different takes on the shambling undead, try some of these titles!

Ajvide Linqvist, John. Handling the Undead

Becker, Robin. Brains: a zombie memoir

Brown, Ryan. Play Dead

Browne, S.G. Breathers: a zombie's lament

Goldsher, Alan. Paul is undead : the British zombie invasion

Kenemore, Scott. Zombie, Ohio: a tale of the undead

Moore, J. P. Toothless

Rowland, Diana. My Life as a White Trash Zombie

Turner, Joan Frances. Dust

RA Blog Categories:

Horror

Just a Thought

---